BLISSFUL GARDEN Narellan

At last! A new ethnic cuisine in our district. Blissful Garden Malaysian Restaurant opened opposite Hungry Jacks on Camden Valley Way, Narellan in January. The good news is that Blissful Garden is very good. The bad news is that it is very small. Maybe smaller than Thai Chilli!

I took my Personal Assistant (and daughter) Brooke and my youngest Chad to the tiny dining room late in January. A tip from the 'in Macarthur magazine' Facebook page lead me there. You really should join up. There have been a few tips on new restaurants already and reader reviews are starting to appear. It is very cool.

Anyway back to Blissful Garden (I know - but it's better than Narellan Malaysian). We are greeted by a lovely waitress (if a little nervous) and soon the owner comes over to introduce himself. All good so far. I was a little excited. "Something other than Thai," I giggled tapping my fingers together like Monte Burns.

"No sign of a garden," Chad observes. "Maybe that's it," I replied poker faced pointing at plastic floral arrangement over the entrance to the toilets. From that point on all reference to the blissful garden were directed to this point in the far left corner of the room.

On to the food. We ordered the most Malaysian dishes we could. There are a few Thai dishes on the menu. Vote with your selections. DON'T ORDER THEM! We went for Malaysian

Beef Curry, Ayam Panggang and vegetable Kuala Lumpur Noodles. There are still a stack of Malaysian dishes I will be returning to try. It was all very, very good. The kids liked it all too and both were keen to revisit Blissful Garden.

Simple mathematics suggests that booking at Blissful Garden is a must. Not much goes into 26! That was our quick count of seats in the micro restaurant.
