Sometimes life deals a crappy hand. 17 year old Kane got called into work just hours before our Thursday night Antico feast. Ah well these things are sent to try us son... ha ha more for us.

I was dining with my other two Brooke and Chad and my former PA (and niece) Carly Rebecca joined us for a feed and a laugh. She told us of her recent CT Scan when she sat down in the waiting room only to be asked what she was after. "OH I'm just waiting for a CT scan," she politely replied. "That's next door," the young lady smiled. "Oh is this like x-rays or something?" Carly asked. "No... This is a real estate agency." Carly is a very funny girl. I miss her at work. I am glad she told us that story before we started eating. Could have been messy.

With new items on the Antico menu Dimitar and Mike were keen for us to try them.. all of them! Platter after platter came to our table. "We are trying to add some 'antique' meals prepared in terracotta dishes in traditional Macedonian style," Mike told me.

We had baked beans mixed with crushed chilli in one of those terracotta dishes. It is baked in the wood fired oven. We also had a Mushroom Bruschetta on a wood fired bread which was a huge hit with everyone. Next was a Volcano Vesuvio pictured page 102. Wow! This is an impressive dish, beautiful too.

After finishing all this food as best we could, we sat back in our chairs and chatted for a while before preparing to leave. "Wait!" said our appropriately named waitress. "Dimitar is bringing up desserts." We smiled politely but all of us were stuffed.

We fought through a selection of gorgeous tartlets from the Antico Bakery next door. "O.M.G!" The things I do for my readers. Yes they were all beautiful. Upon doing our best, we quickly got up and went to the front door so they couldn't bring us more food. Very full!

I have never heard a bad word about Antico. You all have great taste. This is a quality pizza house serving unique ethnic dishes. The owners are also lovely people. That counts with me. I think it does with everyone.
